Ne, a Particle or Adunct of great use, grace and ornament in the Italian tongue, the true use wherof I could yet never find set down, nor methodically described by any, which I find to have these ensuing significations.

First, Ne, is sometimes an Adverb of distinction, or (as some count it) of denial or refusal, and then it is commonly without a verb, and in the beginning of sentences, signifying in English, Nor, or Neither, and then should it be accented, as in these examples, Ne ti sono amico, nè anco lo voglio essere perchè, nè tu lo meriti, nè si conviene, I am not thy friend, nor will I be, because thou neither deservest it, nor is it fitting: or otherwise, Ne questo, nè quello ti concedo, impetruo, nè mi ami, nè mi puoi vedere, I'll grant thee neither this nor that, because thou neither lovest, nor canst endure to see me.

Ne, is secondly, often an Adverb or Preposition local, or of place, but then must the Article I, be understood or implied, whether it be Apostrophated or no, signifying in, or in the, or with; as for example, Spalleggiando nè campi, m'incontrai nè miei amici, walking in the fields, I met with my friends; or else Ne libri li leggo no molte cose, in books many things are read: nè savii si trovano buoni consigli, useful counsel is scarce, &c. in wise men are good counsels to be had, and in vices many miscarry.

Ne, thirdly, being joined (as often it is) with any of these transitory verbs, or of motion, Andare, Fuggire, or else Venire, whether before or after, it serveth for an Adverb merely local or of place, signifying, hence, thence, or away; as for example, Io me ne vado a spasso, I go my ways hence abroad; volendolene egli andare, lui se ne è fuggito, he being about to be gone hence, he is fled hence; Io me ne venni via, I came my ways hence.

Ne, fourthly, doth most often and commonly serve and stand in place of an Adverb of quantity, signifying in English, some, some of it, thereof, of it, of them, part of any, none, not any, none of it, having ever relation, or reference to the chief sub. mentioned, spoken of, or meant in the sentence, as reciprocal unto it, and is most elegantly so often used, to avoid iteration of the said principal Noun-substantive; as for example, Signor mio voi mi domandate denari (remember that Denari is the chief Noun spoken of) Io non ne ho, se ne havevvi, ve ne farai parte, quando ne haverò, voi ne potrete disporre, mi dispiace non haverne, visto che tanti altri ne hanno, che non ne sono degni: Denari, is here mentioned but once, yet hath Ne eight times reference unto Denari: the English is, Sir, you demand money of me, I have none, had I any, I would impart some unto you; when I shall have any, you shall dispose thereof; I am sorry I have none, seeing so many others to have some that are not worthy of it, or of them.

Ne, fifthly, serveth often for the Pronoun primitive, Noi, or Ci of the Dative or Accusative Cases, in English, to us, or else us; except it be with verbs of privation, with which it becometh of the Ablative case; as for example, vedendone giocare lui ne diede denari, seeing us all play, he gave us money, Incontrandone lui ne diéde il buon giorno, meeting us, he gave us the good-morrow ; lui ne hà tòlto il nòstro ripòso, e rubitòne i nòstri denàri, he hath taken our rest from us, and stole our money from us .
